

If this particular idea were to really make HAM radio and HDTV and other such things obsolete just because of airwave interference, wouldn't this be working AGAINST yourself? By this I mean making the lives of American's harder and more dangerous? I really don't care about HDTV or really anything else. But the loss of the HAM radio system and other such things that are meant to inform the public and authorities of emergencies and help start the needed logistics in order to fully protect Americans in a time of emergency makes no sense to me and is a very, very scary thought. I don't mind broadband coming in over a separate wire. In order to continue to protect the safety and liberty of Americans.
